PROJECT PROPOSAL

INTRODUCTION TO THE PROBLEM

Toxicological assessment is of paramount importance in herbal medical treatment procedures to identify adverse effects and to safeguard human beings. Traditional medicines used by women during gestational period may cause serious complications in the fetus. Despite the fact that evidence on the safety profile of herbal products is inadequate to substantiate their use in pregnancy, it is increasingly used by expectant mothers. Evaluation of toxicity of these herbs at the nano level at preclinical and clinical stages of drug discovery will facilitate the identification of toxicants which can be discarded or modified into a safer alternative. Nano medicines are an emerging field in modern research dealing with the synthesis of particle's structure measuring from approximately 1 to 100 nm in size. In recent years, phyto-mediated synthesis is the easiest, speedy, biocompatible and most acceptable
