It has well-furnished laboratories with the latest equipments. The department has efficient and dedicated faculty and support staff who strive to offer the learners holistic development, academic excellence and research orientation.

About the Seminar
 So far conservation of biodiversity and bioprospecting have been approached in isolation despite they are being intricately linked; hence need to be understood through a common and integrated conceptual framework is necessary. This seminar on "Conservation of Biodiversity and Bioprospecting of Indigenous Plants" aims at deliberating and disentangling the science of biodiversity and bioprospecting. This will help in finding the common grounds to deliberate upon as how we can harness the bioresource potential of biodiversity through explicit understanding of the novel biological pathways using emerging technologies. The seminar promises to be quite exciting and effective in terms of achieving the objectives of the integrated approach towards characterizing biodiversity and understanding the biology of novel local systems so as to lay strong foundation for bioprospecting of our bioresources to improve livelihoods and national economy.
